presents:

Enforcement and Reform in the Wake of the Financial Crisis

Thursday, April 15, 2010 • 4:00 p.m.–5:40 p.m.

Events Center • New York Law School, 185 West Broadway

Please join the Center for Financial Services Law for a discussion on enforcement priorities and actions in light of the financial crisis, with an emphasis on how proposed reforms are likely to affect future enforcement. Panelists from a government perspective will address how agencies have adapted their procedures and/or their priorities in response to the challenges of the past two years. The private-practice perspective will discuss how the “crisis” has changed the nature of their practice—both in terms of what they are seeing from enforcers, and as to the different ways they are finding themselves defending their clients.

Panelists:

Adam Kaufmann, Chief of Investigations at the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office

David Markowitz, Special Deputy Attorney General for Investor Protection,
Office of New York Attorney General

Jonathan S. Sack, Principal, Morvillo, Abramowitz, Grand, Iason, Anello & Bohrer, P.C.

Alexander M. Vasilescu, Regional Trial Counsel, Securities and Exchange Commission

And a representative from the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission has been invited to join the panel.

Moderator:

Eric Corngold, Head of Friedman Kaplan Seiler & Adelman’s White Collar Criminal Defense and Investigations Practice

Each attendee will receive 2 CLE credits.
